In early July 1953 the Kwangtung Branch of the China New Democratic Youth Corps was recruiting 500 new members in Hong Kong in order to increase and strengthen the cadres in Hong Kong and to train cadres for local use. The headquarters in charge of recruiting new members was at the Hsiang Tao (7449/1497) Middle School in Hong Kong. Most of those participating in the work of recruiting new members were students at this school. Two meetings and one group picnic were held each week for new members. The indoctrination manual given to newly recruited members was a book entitled "How Iron is Made into Steel."
